

their video games 24/7 and grow up with no sense of creativity. That's why this event is geared for the family side of the lifestyle, and the little ones are more than welcome. There was even a model car contest, with the winner receiving a cash prize and another model car kit to keep the interest.

So, it's no surprise that proceeds from the first annual Torque Fest all went to a little girl whose life has drastically been affected by heart problems. Her name is Hannah, and there's a little spot on the web that tells her families story at www.helpinghannahsheart.com. And it's no surprise that John and his wife took a special interest to helping out Hannah, especially considering that she's their daughter! I highly recommend reading Hannah's story on their web site. Therefore a person can truly understand how an event like this not only pleases the masses, but also make a big impact on one couple who will do anything for their little ones!

While everything went off better than expected for the 1st annual running of the event, once simple detail needed to be improved upon. And that is the fact that only after one try at it, the event has already outgrown itself. So it was decided to move it to a larger venue, which will next year be held about 30 miles south in Maquoketa, Iowa. The Jackson County Fairgrounds should be more accommodating for the crowds, which if they're anything like other greaser events, it's sure to grow exponentially! Plus, the fairgrounds also have a dirt track to kick up a crazy dust storm like this year's Torque Fest. The event will be held on April 30th, 2011, with a cruise night before hand on the 29th. So make your plans now for what is likely to be one of the greatest things to ever hit the state of Iowa.

Nate Ullrich (www.natanic.com)

